MEET JENNY

Jenny Chau began advocating for the special education rights as a law student with Whittier Special Education Clinic. She later joined the Law Offices of Bonnie Z. Yates where she received intensive training in special education law and practice.

Jenny's compassion stems from having several family members struggle with navigating through regional centers and school districts in order to receive services their loved ones are entitled to. Prior to being admitted to the California Bar, Jenny prevailed at a fair hearing before the Office of Administrative Hearings, resulting in continued funding for regional center services for her niece.

SENIOR PARTNER

As senior partner, Jenny represents clients' interests at Individualized Education Program meetings, Individual Program Plan meetings and during all stages of administrative hearings and civil litigation. In her years of practice, Jenny has filed over 50 special education due process requests and have represented parents and students in IEP meetings and IPP meetings in over 100 cases.

Through advocacy and negotiated settlements with school districts, Jenny has obtained for her clients reimbursement for privately funded services, prospective services provided by non-public agencies, District funded independent educational evaluations, as well as compensatory educational services.

In litigation, Jenny has obtained favorable results for clients on school district and regional center matters. The following are a sample of her accomplishments.

WEALTH OF CONTACTS

Jenny is known for her compassion and zealous advocacy. Through her years of practice, she has amassed a wealth of information about referral sources and important contacts in the community and the agencies that are instrumental in her advocacy for her clients.
